(54) Cutlery device

(57) A composite set of cutlery comprises plastic knife, fork and spoon held together by interengagement of single buttons 12 on one item e.g. 10 which engage in cavities 14 between groups 12 of four buttons on an adjacent item e.g. 11.

There may be for example two spaced sets of buttons or the buttons may be in continuous rows. The buttons are moulded into the plastic knife, fork and spoon which are designed as throw-away items.

SPECIFICATION

Cutlery device

This invention relates to a cutlery device of the type in which various items of cutlery are combined into a unitary device for transport and storage but can easily be taken apart so as to use the individual items.

In accordance with the present invention a cutlery device comprises two or more cutlery items which have inter-engagement features by means of which the items can be removably held together for transport or storage. Preferably the inter-engagement features comprise at least four raised engagement features on one of the cutlery items and at least one corresponding raised feature on the other item, the single raised feature engaging in a cavity formed between the four raised features so as to form a resilient engagement.

The four raised features on one item and the single feature on the other item together constitute the engagement features referred to above and there may be several steps of these engagement features on each piece of cutlery. There may alternatively be two continuous rows of raised features or buttons on one piece of cutlery and one continuous row of single raised features or buttons on the other piece of cutlery so as to provide engagement throughout the length of the two pieces of cutlery.

One piece of cutlery may have engagement features on both sides so that it may have the two other pieces of cutlery joined to it, one on each side.

The continuous rows of buttons provide strength and tightness to the joint, a better appearance, and are easier to hold in the hand.

The raised features or round buttons are preferably moulded in plastic and the items of cutlery may themselves also be made of plastic materials. Round buttons are used instead of other shapes because it is easier to mould them and this reduces production costs.

The cutlery of this invention is easy to carry, has low production costs and therefore can be produced at a competitive price, and is disposable and easily detachable.

The joint formed is like a simple mortise and tenon joint, i.e. it forms a male and female joint.

In the accompanying drawings:—

Figure 1 illustrates a single set of engagement features applied to two pieces of plastic cutlery in accordance with this invention;

Figure 6 is a complete Figure illustrating both a fork and a spoon. The lower half of the Figure illustrates the fork and upper half the spoon; and

In Figure 1 is shown the end portions of two pieces of plastic cutlery 10 and 11. On the lower portion 11 are formed four raised buttons 12 which act as engagement features and are moulded in plastic. On the portion 10 is a single raised button 13 which is adapted to enter the cavity 14 formed between the four buttons 12 so that the exterior surface 15 of button 13 engages the corresponding surfaces of the buttons 12 and holds the two items together resiliently.

In Figure 2 an extended portion of the same cutlery is shown and it will be seen that there are two sets of engaging buttons 16 and 17 each of which is in the form shown in Figure 1.

When three items of cutlery are joined together they appear as in Figure 3 in which a spoon 18 is joined to a knife 19 and to a fork 20 by inter-engaging features of the type shown in Figures 1 and 2.

Alternatively, as shown in Figure 4 a knife 20 has two rows of buttons 21, 22 on each side and a corresponding fork and spoon each have a single row of buttons 23, the buttons being formed in a trough or recess 24 in the fork and in the spoon but on opposite sides. When these three items are brought together they form a composite cutlery device of the type shown in Figure 3.

CLAIMS

1. A cutlery device comprising two or more cutlery items which have inter-engagement features by means of which the items can be removably held together for transport or storage.

2. A device according to claim 1 and in which the inter-engagement features comprise at least four raised engagement features on one of the cutlery items and at least one corresponding raised feature on the other items, the single raised feature engaging in a cavity formed between the four raised features so as to form a resilient engagement.

3. A cutlery device according to claim 2 and in which there are several steps of the engagement features on each piece of cutlery.

4. A cutlery device according to any preceding claim and in which there are two continuous rows of raised features or buttons on one piece of cutlery and one continuous row of single raised features or buttons on the other piece of cutlery so as to provide engagement throughout the length of the two pieces of cutlery.

5. A device according to any preceding claim and in which one piece of cutlery has engagement features on both sides so that it may have the two other pieces of cutlery joined to it, one on each side.

6. A device according to any preceding claim and in which the inter-engagement features are round buttons are moulded in plastic and the items of cutlery may themselves also be made of plastic materials.

7. A device according to claim 1 and in which one set of inter-engagement features are in the form of a single row of buttons formed in a trough in one item of cutlery and the other set of inter-engagement features is in the form of two rows of raised buttons forming cavities into which the single row of buttons fit.

8. A cutlery device substantially as hereinbefore particularly described and as illustrated in the accompanying drawings.

LOUBINOX: WHEN IT'S QUALITY THAT COUNTS

An extensive range of distinctive, top quality cutlery is made by the 50-year-old family company, Loubinox. The factory, situated in the tiny village of la Monnerie in France's premier cutlery manufacturing region – Thiers – is the fifth largest of its type in the country and offers a wide variety of colours and designs on the handles of the 18/10 stainless steel range.

The move into the world of fast-changing, contemporary tableware was instigated by the present managing director, Henry Goutteborge, who started with the company, aged 22, in 1968. At that time Loubinox had been producing the traditional wooden-handled chefs' knives and other kitchen cutlery to a professional standard. Non Goutteborge, realising that the future for this kind of line was limited, decided to branch into the difficult, design-orientated flatware market.

Today, although the company still makes a limited collection of chefs' lines, it concentrates on producing superior quality cutlery with prices kept low by efficient methods of production.

Offered in a wide choice of patterns and colours, there are three ranges. 'Crescendo', in forged stainless steel and with abbe handles, is the most expensive line; 'Miestro' comes in the middle-price bracket; and 'Euro', in pressed stainless steel with nylon handles, is the least expensive of the range. All the cutlery is dishwasher proof. With the enormous choice in both price and designs, part of Loubinox's strength is that it offers a price and pattern to cater for every taste and pocket.

In all there are 17 colours, ranging from classic black and ivory through muted shades of grey and rose to bright yellows, greens and corals. There is also a variety of patterns in all three series – from gingham squares, polka dots, triangles and stripes, to the simple but sophisticated 'Double Filet' and 'Griffe' on 'Crescendo' which cleverly combines deep colours with gold to give a rich effect. Matching carvers, salad servers, cheese knife, butter knife, cake forks and pickle forks are available with most patterns. Packaging and point-of-sale display units play an important part in Loubinox's marketing philosophy and great attention is given to presentation. The company offers the consumer loose items – which can be chosen from a specially designed display unit – or sets which are boxed in six and 12. Also available are individual place settings, gift sets and canteens (again in six or 12 settings).

France is a very strong market for the company – just 15 per cent of its production goes overseas (mainly to other European countries, the UK, New Zealand and Australia). But interested retailers can see the range at Bijouche, where the company has its own stand, or at overseas fairs where it shares a stand with other exporters under GEA – a French export group association.

Loubinox manufactures a range of cutlery with a huge choice of colours and patterns. Apart from the designs shown here the company also offers 17 colourways – enough to suit every decor and lifestyle.

haus and the International Style for guidance.

The second major wave of influence from Europe further complicated the situation. Although American designers had known the work of Alvar Aalto since before the war, and some like Eames had drawn inspiration from him, the public first became aware of northern Europe's interpretation of modernism through the "Design in Scandinavia" exhibition, which toured twenty-two cities from 1954 to 1957. More firmly rooted in folk traditions of handcraft production than their industrialized neighbors, Scandinavian designers had evolved an elegant, understated style that quietly asserted the human race's interdependence with nature. While the precise geometric abstractions of mainstream European modernism had sometimes coldly declared the triumph of the artificial, Scandinavian designs executed in warm woods revealed in their vaguely anthropomorphic sculptural forms an intention of going with, rather than against, the grain. Designers like Arne Jacobsen demonstrated remarkable versatility by successfully embodying their vision of natural harmony in furniture, flatware, glass, and ceramics—all of which invited an intimate tactility.

Here was something everyone could appreciate: the critics because form itself became ornament, the public because Scandinavian products enhanced the desire for domestic warmth. By 1960, most middle-class households boasted at least a teak salad set and one of Kay Bojesen's toy monkeys, and Americans who toured Europe made an obligatory pilgrimage to Copenhagen's Den Permanente. As Scandinavian design became popular, even the kitchen began to yield to the trend toward understatement, simplification, and refinement of detail. During the mid-sixties,

9 Plush plastic

Over the past 30 years, Don Wallace has designed numerous stainless-steel flatware patterns for H. E. Lauffer. As high-performance plastics became available, he suggested the firm produce a set of high-quality flatware for long-term use.

The result is Design 10, whose Lexan plastic is claimed to resist impact, stains, and odors, withstand dishwashers and boiling water, and whose five colors are fadeproof. Oval in section, with rounded edges, they feel sturdy and pleasant in the hand.

Royal Doulton Tableware was quickly on the ball after Stoke City Football Club were promoted to Division One. The company produced a special crystal football to mark the team's achievement and it was presented to Stoke City's manager Alan Durban by production director Geoffrey Birks during a buffet lunch at the company's headquarters in Stoke. The full lead handmade crystal ball carried the team's logo on one side and the words 'Stoke City Return to Division One 1978-79' on the other side. Three pieces from the new Bistro Noir range to be launched by Old Hall at the Harrogate Gift Fair. The handles are in black with brass rivets and are dishwasher safe. The range includes a steak knife, dessert knife, steak fork, dessert fork, dessert spoon and soup spoon, all in bright finished stainless steel. The recommended retail price is £12.90 ($26.00) for either a six-piece place setting, box of six of any item, or a two-person set (two each of the steak knife, steak fork, and dessert spoon). Also available is a teaspoon without black handle. Bistro Noir is identical in shape to the original Bistro range designed for Old Hall by Robert Welch. This earlier range is now being re-introduced as Bistro Rosewood with rosewood handles and brass rivets. Other new features of the two versions of Bistro include a dessert knife with smaller blade, a three-pronged dessert fork, a six-piece place setting and attractive new packaging

Georgian House 18/8. Getting better and newer all the time. p. 73

Three brilliant new patterns to add to the glittering success of Georgian House 18/8 stainless flatware, "Bateman", "Kimberly" and "Christy".

Each, is a distinctly individual design... reflecting a growing demand for elegance and sophistication in today's quality stainless flatware market.

Each is resplendent in a superb mirror finish, with sharply defined detailing...and a total unity of form. Flawlessly crafted of heavy-weight 18/8 stainless steel, it is everything you should expect from Georgian House flatware.

From the bold European geometric look of "Kimberly"... to "Bateman", a graceful rendition of an historic English sterling pattern...to the ultra continental styling of "Christy"...it is flatware at its best.

And it's all here, in the dynamic Georgian House 18/8 stainless flatware collection... from the most modern, to the most traditional. And all of it is supported with an effective program of packaging, display, merchandising, and advertising.

Foreign Increases

Price increases have also opened the way to various changes in styles and materials, especially in gold jewelry which has become oriented toward tiny pieces in earrings, pendants and stick pins. Gold chains are still numerous and long, but have become thinner. The price of gold has also favored the development of silver jewelry which has increased to such an extent that approximately 160 million francs worth was exported in 1977. The costume jewelry, always original and inventive, has been developed and promoted by the 600 enterprises that manufacture it. In this area, nature in all its aspects, as well as Egypt and its King Tut and lotus motifs, have become the first promotions.

The best of the Limoges firms attended BIJORHCA with a selection of Chinese, floral and romantic patterns. The lunch plates and breakfast sets exhibited were adorned with enormous fruit patterns and a special decoration by Porcelaine de Paris featured full-size fruit tarts so true to life that it was difficult to tell the difference between the real thing and the reproduction. In general, all of the china dinnerware was extremely elegant and in most cases, worth the price being asked, which is approximately 10 percent above last styling on the one hand, whilst the rustic trend was still dominated by natural earthen, stone and brown shades.

Apart from introducing its new range of pressed lead crystal table bowls, cake plates, ashtrays and candleholders, BMF also presented additions to its wide range of brightly painted glass, porcelain, stoneware and pewter beer and schnaps mugs. The new articles were decorated with the signs vases, plate and bowls, all richly painted and decorated with gold, illustrating old Egyptian motifs based on those found in the tomb of 'Tut-Ench-Amun'.

On the Rosenthal group stand, the 'Classic Rose' collection was featured. There was also a new Christmas plate, featuring the Aachen cathedral, and two new white porcelain wall sculptures illustrating figures from the Mainz cathedral

The many new items introduced by Gralglas included an elegant, slim crystal vase for a single, long-stem rose offered in an attractive rose gift box. Also new were plain crystal vases with a patterned base. place setting. The company has also introduced a new line of stainless flatware. The first offerings included 'Tristan', 'Baluster', and 'Ribbon Edge'. The three patterns are suitable for traditional and contemporary settings.

Gorham has made substantial strides into the giftware market with offerings of figurines, limited editions, commemorative plates, music boxes, juvenile ware, silver-plated gifts and jewel boxes. But the new dinnerware offerings confirm Gorham's commitment to tabletop and are, hopefully, a harbinger of more good things for the formal tabletop market.

Plastic at all prices

Chicago, IL — The plastics tabletop accessory market is bursting at the seams. Manufacturers are offering high-styled plastic ware at all price ranges. One of the latest offerings hits at the mid-price range and still offers whimsy and a designer's name. The company is Grainware, the designer is Pauline Trigere, couturier and famous hostess. The Pauline Trigere line includes, of course, the designer's trademark — the turtle. The turtle appears as trays, placemat/servers, coasters and bowls. The line also includes such shapes as madelein and coquille trays and serving bowls, and a frying pan — for serving only. The shapes are taken, says Ms Trigere, from her kitchen pieces, so the line also includes brioche salad sets, quiche trays and fish mould serving platters. Retail prices range from $5 (£2.56) to $37.50 (£19.23). Ms Trigere is making department store appearances in gourmet departments to plug the line. The tour started in February with Saks Fifth Avenue in New York City. Other department stores included in the tour are Rich's, Atlanta; Marshall Field, Chicago; Jordan Marsh, Boston; and Neiman-Marcus, Dallas.

A blow for glass

The coal strike in the US has caused some industries to begin power cutbacks. To the US glass industry, this means another blow to production, one year after the catastrophic natural gas shortage. This year, many glass manufacturers are coping with the cutbacks of electrical power from the utility companies low on coal supplies by turning production to smaller items which use less energy to manufacture. In the large machine-made glass plants, all is being taken in stride with some companies readying their own generators. Although prospects for a strike settlement appeared less than encouraging at the time of this writing, the glass companies will just have to cope with the cutbacks. The hand-operated plants in the West Virginia and Pennsylvania area are planning an April conference on reducing costs in hand-operated glass plants.

Now, World Tableware International brings you a new line of flatware made from Lexan. This remarkable material, developed by space age technology, is ideal for foodservice applications. It is virtually unbreakable, cannot rust, corrode, absorb liquids or odors, discolor, warp, chip, crack or shatter. It does not conduct heat, is lightweight, dishwasher proof and may be sterilized in an autoclave.

Save On Operating Costs

When talking about design at Denby, it soon becomes evident that innovation is of the utmost importance. Before a new design is launched, it is put through stringent production tests and researched at both consumer and retailer level.

'We watch very closely what other people are doing,' says Rosemary Stockdale. 'We have to spot a change in lifestyles and tastes. We also have to look two or three years ahead. In casual tableware, what's good for today may not be right for tomorrow.'

Market research shows however, that the Denby design philosophy matches exactly the attitudes consumers have towards Denby products which are perceived as having:

- Naturalness in terms of colour, texture and materials
- Interesting though practical shapes
- Warm, earthy colours
- A handcrafted look
- Lack of pretension

It must be added that the 'Denby look' is easy to recognise - but difficult to emulate.

Denby designers do not work at drawing boards but directly with craftsmen who produce what the designer asks for. Each understands exactly what the problems are and each understands what they are trying to achieve. Many ideas come from production managers and craftsmen and, as always, some of the best trials are produced accidentally.

Norman Wood, main board director

Rosemary Stockdale, marketing director

Once an idea is born, prototypes are produced immediately. There is no formal procedure for product development and no time limit can be put on a job. The shape or pattern is worked on until it is right and, instinctively, everyone knows when that time has come. If it becomes apparent that no progress is being made, the idea is dropped. There is no shortage of ideas at Denby - at any one time there are six or seven ideas being worked on - and experiment is encouraged. Of course not all the work is concentrated on major tableware patterns; special pieces and gift items are also included in the programme.

Once the new shape/pattern is ready, it is tested on the market. Whether or not it is given a full-scale launch depends on consumer and retailer reaction. If it stands up well against established lines (Denby and others) then production will go ahead. From the stage of isolating a particular requirement to making initial shipments can take anything up to two years. The investment in time and money is considerable.

Of course the unique look and appeal of Denby stoneware is the combination of natural materials worked by craftsmen together with technical knowledge and the company's highly developed awareness of design. The subtle variations

SOUTHWEST HOUSEWARES SHOW

JUNE 14-16
(NOON), 1978

Now, the Dallas Market Center, for years a leader in the furniture and gift markets, will sponsor a special show featuring only housewares items.

This special show will serve the housewares industry. Make plans to attend the opening show Wednesday, June 14 through noon, June 16, 1978.

For the first time this June 14-16, the housewares industry will have a show in Dallas, in a market center established for the sole purpose of wholesale merchandising of consumer goods. The Dallas Market Center has been a leader in gift, furniture and apparel markets for more than twenty years. Now, this giant complex will sponsor a special show featuring housewares items and open to thousands of housewares buyers across the country.

Throughout the Trade Mart and World Trade Center permanent showrooms featuring housewares will open their doors to the buyers. And on the seventh floor of the World Trade Center, buyers can shop a concentration of permanent and transient showrooms housing housewares lines brought to Dallas especially for the show.

Buyers are special to the Dallas Market Center. And the buyers who shop this show will experience the same services that the over 400,000 buyers who already shop this market center each year receive. Ample parking surrounds the complex. Food facilities are located within each building for your convenience. Beautiful courtyards with real plants, flowers and trees make your buying trip an enjoyable experience.

OXFORD HALL SILVER-SMITHS, LTD. (New York): Four new designs in stainless steel all created to retail for less than $35 for a 50-piece serving for 8. Shown here is Fiji. Other new patterns include Corona, a soft, round design; the more traditional Geneva; and Bel Canto, a simple, Mediterranean design.

well. There are richly ornamented designs with florals and scrolls, classic beaded patterns and even more classic rattail styling. The other school leaps into tomorrow with sleek contemporary styling, what we Americans think of as Scandinavian. Some of these makers are indeed Scandinavian.

Judging stainless flatware's value is based on two considerations. First, does it meet the basic stainless mix known as 18/8? That formula symbol represents an alloy composed of 18% chromium, 8% nickel, and 74% steel. It's considered the optimum combination of metals for stain and corrosion resistance, with the desired hardness. But metal composition alone is only half the story. Weight plays its part too. The ware must feel comfortable and solid in the hand. This is a subjective value, but it's the yardstick most used. People judge by heft and today's luxury stainless has a pleasing heaviness to it.

In this area of weight, at least three makers offer dinner-size stainless. These are called European or continental size. To most Americans, accustomed to the usual place size, they seem very substantial and impressive. And of course they are weighty.

Who's who

Fully six of the nine sterling silver guild members carry stainless flatware, though some are more committed to it than others. It ranges from Kirk with just one pattern, to Oneida with dozens, much of it not in the luxury class however. Oneida's new Heirloom LTD line does fit the luxury class, selling at $35 for a five-piece place setting. All prices noted are for five-piece settings, and all ware is made in the U.S.A. unless otherwise noted.

Towle introduced its dinner-size ware, priced at $25, three years ago. Recently it did a bit of reverse English and made four of its popular stainless patterns in silverplate. Towle's stainless is made in West Germany.

Reed & Barton weighs in at a top price of $30 with a new entry in the continental-size. Its stainless would have Paul Revere applauding.

Kirk's one pattern, English Tip, made in England and sold under the Gentry trademark is $26. It's all that Stainless flatware? In my store? Yes, indeed. Drop whatever conceptions or misconceptions you might hold about stainless flatware. It's come a long way from the early imports that were so light they barely stayed put on the table. Today's stainless, coming from some of the top flatware makers, is weighty, well-made and beautifully designed. It's selling in better jewelry stores across the country. And it's selling at prices once associated with sterling flatware.

Two schools of thought prevail in stainless pattern design. One group emulates the look of traditional sterling and silverplate patterns. Some even produce stainless versions of their own sterling or silverplate patterns that have an "I can fool you" look about them—and they do it very

Ein neues Besteck von
Robbe & Berking

Avenue

„Avenue“, das neue R&B-Besteck des Jahres 1977, läßt mit seiner strengen Einfachheit in Form und Dekor Anklänge an die anspruchsvollsten Entwürfe aus der Art Deco erkennen.

„Avenue“ wurde von Silke und Robert Berking entworfen. Darin kommt ein besonderer Stil des Hauses zum Ausdruck – die alte Tradition, daß die Inhaber selbst an der Gestaltung der Bestecke und Kollektion arbeiten. Eine Identifizierung, an der sich seit dem Gründungsjahr 1874 nichts geändert hat und die selten geworden ist in einer Welt der anonymen Massenproduktion. „Avenue“ wird in zwei Ausführungen hergestellt: in 90-g-Hartglanzversilberung und in 800/000 Echtsilber.

Die Noblesse und die strenge Schönheit dieses Besteckentwurfes machen deutlich, was traditionelle Silberschmiedekunst zur Tischkultur unserer Zeit beizutragen vermag.

Die Rückseite des Besteckes trägt das gleiche feine Rippendekor wie die Vorderseite. Liebe zum Detail, auch dort, wo man sie nicht auf den ersten Blick sieht.

Beim Messer bildet eine kleine, fein profilierte Manschette den Übergang zur Klinge. Das Rippendekor des Löffelstiels mündet in einen die ganze Löffelmulde umschließenden Laffenrand. Feinheiten, die keine Massenfertigung zulassen und die für den Kenner die formende Hand des Silberschmiedes sichtbar machen. „Avenue“ ist ein weiteres Beispiel für die Pflege alter, handwerklicher Traditionen im Hause Robbe & Berking.

TIKITO a new line from Norway

The emergence of a new cutlery range from the famous Norwegian company, Norsk Stalpress, is always something of an event and when the range involves the work of that brilliant designer Tias Eckhoff, you can be sure it will cause considerable excitement.

Norsk Stalpress, which makes some of Scandinavia's finest stainless steel ware, has, in fact, chosen the Birmingham International Spring Fair to launch a new line to its cutlery patterns and it can be seen on the David Washington Distributors stand.

Called Tikito, the new ware is a variant of another famous Tias Eckhoff design, Tiki. Incorporating the simple elegance of Tiki (which has been a huge success for the company), an attractive decor has been added for Tikito.

'The shape of Tikito is exactly the same as Tiki,' says the company. 'However, we decided to make a design with a decoration — by decor designer Arne Lindaas — because many of our customers have been demanding this for some time.'

As with Tiki, Tikito will be reasonably priced. However, in the case of Tiki there are eight items for 'daily use' whereas for Tikito the number of items has been extended. In addition to the eight items — soup spoon, dinner fork, dinner knife, dessert spoon, dessert/salad fork, sandwich knife/butter spreader, coffee spoon and teaspoon — a serving set and sauce ladle will also be available.

The philosophy behind Tiki is that it is for daily use and, normally, in their busy working week-days people do not use serving pieces. Indeed, Norsk Stalpress says that research confirms that 'extra pieces' are bought only as gifts. It is anticipated, however, that Tikito, with its tasteful decoration, will be considered a little more special and therefore the extras were added.

Tikito joins a delightful range of Norsk Stalpress cutlery. Designs such as Aztec, Maya (the only stainless steel design represented in the museums of cultural art in Gothenburg, Copenhagen, Oslo, Bergen and Trondheim) and Una have established the company in many world markets. Exports, now a healthy 70 per cent of total business, go mainly to America, Denmark, Sweden, the UK, Canada and Australia.

Other items being exhibited at David Washington's stand include a range of porcelain tableware from Japan (called Blue Danube, it is available in tea, coffee and dinner ware plus

NOV/DEC., 1976

A range of five table pieces was introduced by metalware manufacturers Abert Fratelli Bertoli. The set combines 18/12 nicrosil steel, black plastic trimming and crystal containers, and comprises a covered cheese dish; salt, pepper and toothpick set; oil and vinegar set; oil, vinegar and cruet set; and the same four items with a salad bowl incorporated.

The Spring MACEF will take place in Milan from February 12 to 16—PM

Messico Molato, designed by Federico Simone for Studio Selezione, is the name of a range of hand made pieces of crystal such as the fruit bowl and two sizes of vase pictured. Each piece has a reed-like etched decoration

This range of silver plated cutlery called Patent was shown by the Italian division of WMF. Features of the range include special strengthening, a traditionally fashionable style with the added beauty of silver, and a competitive price

New at MACEF from Abert Fratelli Bertoli was a range of table sets such as the two pictured, combining 18/12 nicrosil steel, plastic and crystal

These two unusually shaped vases, the one on the left featuring indentation decorations, were two of the crystal designs by Flavio Barbini for Barbini Alfredo Vetreria of Murano

Another range of cutlery to be exhibited at the Autumn MACEF, this time in 800/1000 silver, was this range — based on an English style — shown by Rino Greggio Argenteria

This cut crystal candleholder, characterised by the silver band applied to the base, with a matching ashtray with a similar silver band on the lip, as shown by Nerdi Mauro of Firenze

STEEL SERVERS

Also new from Sergio Asti is this range of stainless steel cutlery (above) and salad servers (below).

Called 'Boca,' and designed in collaboration with Inao Miura, it is produced by ICM of Lumezzane, Brescia, Italy.

SPEEDFEEDER

'Speedfeeder' is a module designed to provide hot meals in as short a time as possible. It can be mounted on a trailer or truck chassis, or parachuted to a disaster area, and only needs one person to operate it. The basic module consists of insulated units, refrigerated units, microwave ovens, washing facilities with hot and cold running water, and a complete lighting system controlled by a control panel in the driver's cab. Power is supplied by a gas or petrol generator. The racks can contain up to 1000 meals, ready-cooked and only requiring re-heating, and can cater for 100 people an hour.

TWO FACES

The Association of Illustrators is three years old, and this month it is holding its first annual exhibition of British illustrators' work. Brian Grimwood's promotional poster for Polydor Records' 'Focus' (above) and George Underwood's book jacket for Pan's The Man Who Lived To Earth (below) represent two very different approaches to portraiture. Two hundred other originals will be on show, 8-28 October at Thumb Gallery, 20/21 D'Arbly Street, London W1; opening hours are 10-6 Monday to Friday 11-5 Saturday.

NATION OF BUSYBODIES?

Is the profusion of Government legislation 'o which we have become so conditioned in recent years turning Britain into a nation of busybodies?

Or have we already been turned? Certainly the world at large makes no secret of its belief that Britain already has far too many Chiefs and nothing like enough Indians in almost every sphere of activity, from industry to sport.

There can be few areas of British life that are not under investigation by a select committee of one sort or another. No industrial company can escape the attentions of those well-meaning officers of central and local government, and of those often self-appointed committees dedicated to furthering export effort, design achievement, welfare, training, conservation and heaven knows what else. No retailer can rise above the heap of admonition and advice that pours daily through his letter box; and neither, for that matter, can the poor private citizen, as he piles up the brown envelopes, and wonders how on earth he can ever hope to cope with the growing mountain of trivia churned out by a legislative machine gone mad.

One clear result of it all, as far as industry and the business world are concerned, is that survival depends on astute accountancy, an ability to read and interpret small print, and a willingness to give the scorer precedence over the batsmen whose task it is to face the fast bowling.

The accountant has become supreme. Without his guidance and control over the solemn processes of giving away cash with one hand and taking it back with the other, the production, sales and design executives might as well go home and live off the proceeds of the innumerable schemes that are there to help those who not only can't, but won't, help themselves.

I am brought to this splenetic outburst by the massive and indigestible mail received by Tableware International (along with every other trade journal in the land) from the kind of busybodies I have been talking about.

There is the Department of Industry, of course, whose analyses of production, retail sales and other matters are extremely useful, if a trifle complex in their statistical content. Then there is the Department of Employment, which currently advises us that the Secretary of State has approved proposals for a levy on Clothing and Allied industries equal to 0.8 per cent of their payroll, payable in one instalment . . . Employers may appeal to an independent tribunal against assessment. Etc. Then there is the Distributive Industry Training Board, which grants awards to employers, 'after training advisers' have carried out 'an intensive training audit including discussions with managers, training staff, staff and trainees'. Phew!

Perhaps, before all is lost, we should take a look at the declining economies of the East, where committee rule and the intervention of Government and Party busybodies is so rife that they often forget to reap the harvest.

Still, it is an ill wind . . . and I am heartened — and amused — to hear that Mr Colin Pyman has retired from the board of the P-E Consulting Group, following a period of secondment to the Department of Industry, in order to set up a specialist consultancy to advise firms on Government aid for industry. Good luck to him. The spirit of private enterprise is clearly still alive!

DESIGN AWARDS

Still on the subject of those bodies whose self-appointed task it is to adjudicate, praise (and otherwise!) the work of others, I see that the Design Council of Britain has appointed a panel of judges to select 'well-designed souvenirs of the Queen's Silver Jubilee', for an exhibition to be held at the London and Scottish Design Centres next January. The Prince of Wales has agreed to be its chairman.

Fine. The Design Council has done (but not always so) some good work in the past, propagating the virtues of artistry and craftsmanship in industrial products. But how, I wonder, does it square its somewhat ascetic view of these matters with the judgment of the market place, which is really the only thing that matters in these hard times.

What odds that the choice of the Design Council will not be that of the souvenir hunter in New York, or Kuwait or, for that matter, in Littlehampton-on-Sea?

MELLOR'S PROGRESS

I am delighted to see that David Mellor has extended his range of cutlery, made up to now in Provencal Rosewood and Chinese Ivory. There is no more painstaking or immaculate draftsman in the cutlery field and the growing success of his workshops at Park Lane, Sheffield, bears testimony to his judgment and skill.

Two examples of David Mellor's cutlery. He has now extended the range (see Mellor's Progress)

The new range, called Java, has red, ivory, black and yellow handles, moulded in an abrasion-resistant resin ideally suited to the dishwashing machine. As always, Mellor, hand finishes the top-grade steel used for his knife blades, and personally supervises the making of every piece.

Mellor is, of course, an old hand at winning design awards. I would hate to have to count the number that have come his way since he left the Royal College of Art back in those brave years of austerity when design was a word used only by the elite.

I recall the first of those awards — for his Pride cutlery, made for him then by Walker and Hall. He is now resurrecting it in silver plate with xylonite handles. More important than any number of Design Council accolades, Mellor's work is unpretentious, good value for money — and it sells. That's what success is all about!

Cosco Merges 5 Subsidiaries Into the Parent Organization

COLUMBUS, Ind. — Cosco, Inc. has merged five of its wholly owned subsidiaries into Cosco, Inc., the parent corporation.

They are Cosco Home Products, Inc., Tucker Cosco, Inc., Ransburg Cosco, Inc., Cosco Collections, Inc., and Cosco Chemicals, Inc.

The former subsidiaries will continue to operate their business in the same manner as before, but as divisions of Cosco, Inc.

The mergers were made primarily for administrative purposes, according to Cosco.

The other subsidiaries of the company - Cosco Business Furniture, Inc., Tyndale Cosco, Inc., Sunset Cosco, Inc., and Hyalyn Cosco, Inc. - will continue to operate as subsidiary corporations.

Water Pik Filter OK'd After EPA Sales Ban

NEW YORK — Teledyne Water Pik's model S1 water filter was registered by the Environmental Protection Agency on Thursday, May 13, one week after the EPA ordered The Jones Store in Kansas City to stop selling the unit because of non-registration, it was learned.

Water Pik had shipped the products to accounts before formal registration had come through formal EPA approval. He explained, "We were given a temporary EPA number which we printed on our cartons, but we had not yet been given formal approval for that number. Now we have it and we'll be calling Kansas City to let them know."

Water Pik, said Krynicki, had shipped about 100,000 of the water treatment products, which were not

Gorham: better go for baroque

AUSTERITY thinking is not for The Gorham Co., Providence, R.I., which has just introduced its lavish new sterling flatware pattern—Crown Baroque, at $185 for four pieces.

At a time when other among sterling silver producers are trotting out sterling-cum-stainless offerings (GTR, first August issue), Gorham has pledged itself to consumer demand for sheer opulence in detailed flatware.

Gorham executives describe Crown Baroque as "the only true baroque pattern in the company's selection of sterling flatware." The motif makes extensive use of carved scrolls, piercings, florals and a crown.

Mr Kulu of PO Box 100, Kulu, South Gate, the Tradekill is an advantage of the exploding market for hardware of this type, by inviting any interested British manufacturer to participate in the setting up of a small factory for production under licence. The agreement would include the provision of technical know-how. Anyone interested is invited to contact Mr Kulu direct.

Mr Jordan takes over

The Hague. New president of the European Aluminium Hollowware Manufacturers' Association is Mr Cliff Jordan, managing director of Eastham Pyramid, the hollowware manufacturing subsidiary of Burco plc. The inauguration took place at the Association's recent conference here. Mr Jordan, who has given many years' service to trade organisations, has also held office as president of both the Hardware Manufacturers' Association and the British Aluminium Hollowware Manufacturers' Association. He is the current president of the National Hardware Alliance in Britain.

It was on behalf of the BAHMA that Mr Jordan became the first British delegate to the European body back in 1968. During his term of office, he intends to start a programme of joint market research on behalf of all manufacturers operating in the hollowware market.

Christofle move

Yamville, France. Henry Kahn writes. Christofle has opened its new 30-acre factory here some 70 miles from Paris and 15 miles from the sea. The company has been able to expand production facilities for its silver-plated hollowware by building a new 100,000 sq ft extension. Denis factory extension. The Government wanted no further development in that region — a decision which was given for the fact. Government aid was forthcoming in construction. The factory is a good one for labour population. The 30-acre site allows for extensive carparking and for future expansion. The factory is modern and a special extractor system keeps dust absent from the factory and pollution away from the surrounding atmosphere.

Production capacity is for about six million pieces of cutlery; some 250 tons in weight. Christofle, in conjunction with the Ministry of Labour, has ensured sufficient skilled personnel, but the Ministry of Education has also assured a future flow by starting a special class at a local technical school.

Our photographs show some examples of the latest Sigma cutlery range, in a specially-treated steel which gives an unpolished finish.

Third Fair

Dublin. The Irish Hardware Trade Fair will be held here from Tuesday, Oct 7, to Thursday, Oct 9. The event, the third in the series, is sponsored by the Irish Hardware Association, and is the only specialist event of its kind in the Republic. It is held at the Royal Dublin Society's showground in Ballsbridge, less than two miles from the centre of Dublin. It is trade only.

Trading in one-third of the United States

Denver, Colorado. This year marks the 10th anniversary of the opening of the Denver Merchandise Mart, the vast complex that houses showrooms, office space and admin services to manufacturers' representatives and agents. Sales are confined, in the main, to wholesale fashion giftware, home furnishings and footwear. Store owners and buyers visit the Mart to see the goods and place orders.

around one million square metres which constitutes one-third of the land area of the United States. Although we do not service the more densely-populated areas on both coasts, we are in one of the faster-developing areas in the country, our markets have increased, in some cases, by as much as 40 per cent.

The next gift and jewellery shows to be held at the Denver Merchandise Mart are August 24 to 27 this year, February 29 to March 3, 1976, August 29 to September 1, 1976, March 6 to 9, 1977; August 28 to 31, 1977.

As an example of what the Mart does, one of the newest tenants is the Ebeing & Reuss Co. Its representative operating out of the Mart will be presenting his company's imported range of tableware which includes Kaiser crystal, Royal Albert china and Bayel stemware. The Mart even boasts the 'Denver Gift & Jewelry Association', an organisation of permanent tenants in those trades resident in the complex.

A Japanese investment

Republic of Ireland. Nippon Toki Kabushiki Kaisha, the fine china manufacturer of Nagoya, Japan, is to make a major investment in Arklow Pottery in the Republic. Under the terms of the deal Nippon will get a 29.99 per cent holding in Arklow Pottery — just below the 30 per cent level which, under the Irish Takeover Code, normally requires a bid for outstanding shares. Nippon will subscribe £115,184 ($264,923 approx) for 359,950 new shares in Arklow Pottery at 32p (74c approx) each, subject to shareholder approval.

Following the proposed link should the terms be agreed, Arklow Pottery will participate with Nippon in establishing a new porcelain tableware manufacturing unit which Nippon plans to set up in Ireland.

Arklow Pottery already has plans to embark on a £300,000 ($690,000) capital investment programme, which will be financed jointly by the money from the Japanese equity stake from the EDC Industrial Development Authority and from the company's bankers.

Bicentennial promotions will be in high gear, according to buyers shopping the New York gift

The newest and hottest idea in pewter and pewter-like metal is flatware, which is carving out a whole new business. But other neat-looking gift items in pewter are also candidates for hot-item status.

Here's an assortment, at a variety of price points, as some of the items which are being sought for pewter-theme shops and pewtery promotions.

...the only American flavor," the spokesman said. "But other buyers — including some large buying offices — have been reluctant to get into the Bicentennial celebration, in part because consumer distrust of government has been so high.

Similarly, a source at West Virginia Glass and Specialty Co., expects inflation to slow down the next two years.

Our prices have increased about 10 per cent since Nixon was first elected to office," the source said. That's with wage and price controls, higher raw material costs, increased interest rates and enormous increases in packing and freight costs. Under Ford it has gotten better."

A spokesman for Ritts Co., which manufactures high-end lucite gifts, has had trouble getting raw materials in the past, claims the Ford Administration "will set business on the right course and align the nation's priorities" in terms of the economy. The spokesman expects money for fiscal expenditures will ease up again in the next year.

Stores are searching for Early American and Colonial gift items that will fit in with "1776" shops scheduled to open this fall. Many stores are finding tremendous volume potential in pewter and are investing in quality pewter lines. "We are going to domestic sources increasingly," said the top buyer for this New York buying office. "Prices of imported domestic metal products — brass, copper, tin — have just gotten out of reason in the past 12 months. Furthermore, we just don't know how much higher they will go. Domestic resources can't get away with price hikes of 50 per cent if they'd price themselves out of the market — so for awhile we are buying here at home."

ANOTHER NEW YORK buying office claims its stores are here looking for natural-look gifts. The stores, however, are being warned to order "just enough" to get them through the fall selling season, primarily because the trend for 1975 is expected to be art deco.

"The natural look has been the rage for three years — something due to take its place and, to our way of thinking, it is shaping up to be art deco.

This buying office claims it has seen the rise of art deco gifts in the past few months with introductions from such trend-setters as Sigma Marketing. Its stores are being alerted to keep their eyes open for this look.

"The months ahead are shaping up as highly unpredictable from the point of sales," said one New York department store buyer. "That means we are buying basics. We're not out to shock the consumer with our merchandise assortment; we're out to make figures."

7-Typical Early American fiddleback design in pewter flatware, Northford, from International Silver, at $25 for a five-piece place setting.

8-Pewter top-of-the-glass jigger is an old-fashioned idea from Kirk Pewter.

9-Jamestown is Reed & Barton's entry into the pewter flatware business, at $35 for a five-piece place setting.

country's tableware industry have been solved — at least for the time being — but it has meant higher wages. Manpower in Italy is now twice as expensive as it was two years ago.

The shortage of raw materials, such as plastics, has been offset to some extent by a 32 per cent increase in Italian production of these materials.

But there is little that manufacturers can do about increases in taxation — particularly Value Added Tax — which since the new laws came into effect on January 1, has affected the whole Italian economy.

Another, less obvious, factor affecting costs is the growing emphasis being put on design by Italy's tableware manufacturers. They have to pay more to get top designers, and naturally this cost is reflected in prices.

It is interesting to note that, in the past, Italian manufacturers of tableware produced 80 per cent of traditional ware, and 20 per cent of new designs.

The figures in 1974 are 60 per cent traditional and 40 per cent modern — and in the future, it is intended to produce 50 per cent of each. So that explains why such high value is put on top designers.

As far as deliveries are concerned, Italy's smaller manufacturers (there are about 900 of them), are better off than the 100 large ones.

Small companies could accept orders at Macef, and with few exceptions be in a position to deliver in April. Many of the large manufacturers, on the other hand, have a minimum 90-day delivery date.

This was born out during Macef by four of Italy's best known tableware manufacturers: Richard-Ginori, Maestri Muranesi, Vetrerie Bormioli, and Ceramica Casarte.

"We can deliver our medium quality pottery and earthenware in two months," said Mr Raimondo Chircop, export department area manager for Richard-Ginori, of Milan. "But for our high

225 EARLY BIRD MARKET HIGHLIGHTS

A SPECIAL SECTION

JUNE, 1961

A LOOK AT THE LATEST —EARLY

AGAIN this year New York's famed gift and art center will hold its Early Bird Market—a pre-fall showing of the latest high-style china, glass and decorative items to be shown at fall shows. The following pages include a sampling of these items as well as news of other developments at 225. The Early Bird Market will run from June 12 through July 14.

Eye-catching among the new gifts are (top to bottom) an unusual, three-dimensional patterned stainless steel tableware set from Frederick Lunning, Denmark; a trio of Westmoreland Glass compotes with colorful leaf design; condiment sets from Rubel & Co. featuring new 'Jewel' design and walnut lids; and a reproduction of Degas' famous 'Dancer' sculpture from Austin Productions Inc., Bklyn., N.Y.
